disappeared. Since then the Reipers have hunted for him, but without success.

Yesterday Mrs. Reiper attended the Schwabenfest at Ridgewood Park, accompanied by her uncle, who is quite an athlete. While they were walking about the grounds, Miss Reiper suddenly gave a scream and cried:

"Why, there is Willie."

She pointed, as she spoke, to a fashionably-dressed young man who had a lady on his arm. Miss Reiper rushed over to talk to him, but Schmidt dropped his companion and ran away.

The unknown young woman quietly fainted, but no attention was paid to her, for Miss Reiper was pursuing her betrayer while her uncle kept close behind her. Finany the girl caught Schmidt, but, with an oath, he struck her in the face, and then tore her clothes into taiters.

This only occupied a few seconds, and then the uncle arrived on the scene of action, and quickly turned the tables. He jumped for young Schmidt, punched and kicked him, and when he finally stopped from sheer weariness, the fashionably-dressed Willie looked like a tramp.

In court this morning Miss Reiper said that she proposed to punish Schmidt to the full extent of the law.

Every one seemed to look for one feature of the parade, which did not materialize. It was stated in some of the morning papers that the men and women who work in "sweat shops" would parade in rags in order to give the public some idea of the manner in which they are compelled to live.

This story started from the fact that last night while the grand marshal and his aides were holding the last meeting, several officers of the unions to which the sweaters belong called. They were asked to parade and replied that they would like to do so, but had no proper clothes to wear.

"Oh, parade anyhow," cried Assistant Marshal Edwards, "even if you have to appear in rags."

The remark was made in jest, and of course was accepted in that sense.
